Maharana Pratap Sagar

Pong Dam Lake in India, also known as Maharana Pratap Sagar or Pong Reservoir was created in 1975, by erecting the highest Dam in India on the Beas River in the fen zone of the Siwalik Hills the Kangra district of the state of Himachal Pradesh.

The Pong Dam named in the honors of Maharana Pratap. The lake is well-known wildlife sanctuary (Bird sanctuary) and one of the 26 international fen sites declared in India by Ramsar convention. Pong Reservoir covers an area of 60,610 acres and fen area is 38,700 acres.

Bird Sanctuary

The reservoir was declared as a bird sanctuary in 1983. A 5-kilometre (3.1 mi) belt from the periphery of the lake has been declared as buffer zone for the management of the bird sanctuary. The national, as well as international, significance of the sanctuary is enhanced because of its waterfowl diversity, which was evidenced by the increase of water fowl species from 39 prior to the reservoir to 54 species at post-reservoir stage.

Birds - Migratory & Resident Species

The main bird species reported are the Bar headed geese, Anser indicus, northern lapwing, ruddy shelduck, northern pintail, common teal, spot-billed duck, Eurasian coot, red-necked grebe, black-headed gulls, plovers, black stork, terns, water-fowl and egrets.
